

THE DAILY CITIZEN.

The CITIZEN is the most extensively circulated and widely read newspaper in Western North Carolina. Its discussion of public men and measures is in the interest of public integrity, honest government, and prosperous industry, and it knows no personal allegiance in treating public issues.

The CITIZEN publishes the dispatches of the Associated Press, which now covers the whole world in its scope. It has other facilities of advanced journalism for gathering news from all quarters, with everything carefully edited to occupy the smallest space.

Specimen copies of any edition will be sent free to any one sending the address.

Advertisements: Reasonable, and made known on application at this office. All transient advertisements must be paid in advance.

THE STING OF SECTIONAL BITTERNESS.

He who has drawn happy auguries of returning amity between the sections by the frequent cordial reunions of the survivors of the war, sometimes in the interchanges of visits upon the soil of the once opposing forces, sometimes on the very bloody battlefields themselves, must become heart-sick at the frequent dashes of their hopes by the growing rather than fading animosities of politicians. Much more so when the sincerity of the veterans may be called in question. It is not a great while since the soldiers of the two sections met on the battlefield of Gettysburg, and strolling arm in arm over the ground of conflict, here, pointed out the scene of some fiercely contested contest, there, where some heroic charge had been, there, where a bloody repulse had been received, there, where some heroic leader, of one or the other side, had fallen; but all united in the tribute to valor and to the nobility of the sentiment which had animated the soldier of the Union and of the Confederacy. Later still, there was the full reunion on the bloody field of Chickamauga, and the men who had crossed bayonets in that closest and most sanguinary battle of the war, met again to throw their arms around each other in brotherly embrace, and then separated to believe peace at last was won.

On the very heels of all this burling of the hatchet and this wreathing of the olive branch, comes the childish action of a leading Pennsylvania Grand Army post. That, the Abbe Patterson post, has passed resolutions to the effect that the Second Maryland relief regiment, have erected on the Gettysburg battlefield, within four feet of the monument erected by a loyal Maryland regiment, a monument commemorating the disloyal deeds of said rebel regiment, thus undertaking "to make treason honorable." Therefore, they resolve that the "Abbe Patterson post," "enter their solemn protest against this sacrilege, and most emphatically denounce such intrusion by traitors upon sacred soil, and ask that the Gettysburg Battlefield Association, of which Governor Beaver is chairman, cause the rebel monument to be removed and express orders given that no more of that nature be erected." Governor Beaver has said, in response, that "these resolutions show the right spirit." He further states for him, "I am and always will be opposed to any rebel organization erecting its own monuments within the grounds of the association."

Governor Beaver himself was a veteran, the battle of Gettysburg was fought on Pennsylvania soil, and the action taken by his posts is possibly authoritative and definite.

At all events, the act was childish and chilling; and seems to be in consonance with a sentiment of hostility that increases rather than abates. We are sorry to believe so. Certainly the feeling of the South is amicable and amiable, the desire for perfect pacification earnest and sincere. The South wishes to repair its fortunes; more than that, it is anxious to advance them to a higher pitch than they have ever attained. There is present fair prospect that this will be achieved. And for this very reason is the hostility to the South again aroused. It is no very pleasant prospect to any people to see another one heretofore dependent largely upon the industries of the first, rise from industrial obscurity, snatch the sceptre of superiority, and lead where it was once an humble follower.

If peace, harmony, confidence remain undisturbed, then there is certain prospect of transfer to the South of much of the capital and much of the manufacturing industry of the North, attracted by climate, by proximity to raw material, by extended season for work, by economy of labor, by equal facility of transportation. It is not in human nature to accept in even temper this transfer of empire. It is inevitable that peace and harmony continue to prevail. To disturb such happy conditions is diabolical; it is also human. And thus we observe all the agencies of hate and dissension actively set to work, we would fain hope without effect; for the South is not without true friends at the North, and the Union also has its loyal adherents much more true than those who have themselves hoarse in denunciation of traitors and treason.

WHERE IT PINCHES.

Every man's ambitions of wearing good clothing feels that he is better dressed when he buys English or other foreign goods. Not only because, if the wearer happens to buy them abroad, in England, on the continent, or even in Canada, they are cheaper, but because they are intrinsically better. The American goods look as well, in fact they are more tasteful in color and design. But when compared in durability, they yield to their foreign rivals. The reason is plain. The foreign goods are made of new wool; the American goods largely of shoddy.

The following from the Springfield Republican enters somewhat into statistics. The increase of shoddy as material for cloths is the immediate effect of a tariff which excludes free wool, under pretext of protecting American manufacturing industries, and also sheep husbandries. The New England men say that they want free wool and would do better without protection; and it is a statistical fact that the number of sheep has diminished full 40 per cent. in the sheep raising States since 1880.

Our mountain people until a late period were wont to clothe themselves with the cloth spun and woven by their wives and daughters; a good and handsome material it was and is—for many still use it. That was all wool and no shoddy; it was warm, durable and handsome, whether gray, blue or purple. We are sorry to see its use decreasing, for it was characteristic of an industrious and independent people. But the use of "store clothes" has become largely prevalent, as more convenient to get and as saving much labor at home. Our merchants lay in large stocks of ready-made clothing, made in the Northern markets. They buy as best they can. It would be the same to them if they could get all new wool goods; better, in fact, if they could get them on the same terms as they buy what is certainly not all new wool; for the tariff on foreign cloths and ready-made clothing makes such the luxury of the rich. And this distinction will exist so long as the country is persuaded of the virtues of protection.

The Republican says:

Our great "woolen" industry which is being so fastened by the present tariff, and the course of its development strongly reflected in the following exhibit of rags, shoddy and waste:—

Year.	Wool.	Value.
1888.	5,998,250	$1,184,300
1889.	6,902,569	2,605,753
Increase.	9,004,319	$1,421,453

Here we have the promise of a vastly increased crop of these $10 "all wool" suits of American made clothes for use on the stump in 1892. By seeking to tariff tax wool out of the country we draw in the rags and waste of all Christendom with which to clothe ourselves. What is more natural, therefore, than that the advent to power of the special champions of the raw wool tax should be accompanied by an increase at the rate of 140 per cent. of the imports of shoddy substitutes?

NORTH CAROLINA AND THE CONSTITUTION.

We thank the News-Observer for the following timely rebuke given to those who reproach North Carolina for being late in giving adherence to the constitution of the United States. It was not the apathy or indolence of Rip Van Winkle that kept her back; it was not indifference to the advantages of a more powerful union that restrained her. North Carolina, like her sister States, had experienced to the full all the evils of the weakness and inefficiency of the Confederation. She wished and proposed something more vigorous; but in making a stronger government, she did not intend to make a master. She knew what liberty was; she had known what tyranny was; she had resisted and overthrown it and had won her freedom. In discussing the constitution, she dictated her terms, and they were accepted. What those terms were, we let the News-Observer tell in his own way:

"Did it ever occur to these critics that the Constitution she ratified was not the Constitution that the other States had adopted? In the Constitution the other States had adopted there was no clause forbidding Congress to establish a State religion, or to abridge the freedom of speech or freedom of the press; and no clause declaring that the powers not delegated to the States, and so also there are many other differences."

"The Constitution first adopted North Carolina declined to ratify; it was only after the Constitution was virtually amended that she gave her assent."

"Her action, now brought prominently before the people, is an object lesson, teaching important truths connected with our government. If so minded North Carolina need not have adopted the Constitution, and in that case would have remained a sovereign nation, separate, independent and solitary. In that event she would have had no connection with the United States. But the fact that she closed up the rear, made the circle of States complete, for Little Rhody don't count; and it is now matter of rejoicing."

We are not so hidebound in our politics that we can see no good in our opponents. They have a right to their own opinions as we have to ours. There are many sincere, pure and honest, as well as able, men among them. We would be sorry for the country if there were not; because one of the two great parties must rule alternately; and if they were all on the other side, the country would soon go to the "demonition how-wows." Some of the leading Republicans are doing all they can to reach that consummation. Good men among them are doing all they can to counteract bad influences, and will sooner or later be effective in bringing the country back under Democratic rule.

Among these good and able men, prominent and worthy, is Judge Gresham, whom we hope to see, since the vacancy has been filled by a Republican, on the supreme court bench, instead of Mr. Harrison's law partner Miller, who seems to have no special fitness except that he has been so associated with the President.

Mr. Gresham is an honest outspoken man, else he would not have so rebuked the methods by which Mr. Harrison was elected, which he does as follows:

It is the Pharisees who are doing this. It is men of prominence and respectability who raise these large sums of money, knowing the use they will be put to—men who deal openly in corruption one day and go to church the next.
